

MR. HOLSTEIN MONOLOGUE

*In this monologue, a paternity test comes back that states that the Father is NOT the Father to a young twelve year old Jackie. Caring, limited-emotion, wealthy.

Well, Jackie...I guess we are one of those rare cases...but, do you feel any different? I don't. In fact, Jackie, I feel even more like your Dad. I want you to know now that a blood test doesn't separate us but only makes us closer because we have something even more special than genetics...we are bonded by something greater than what doctors tell us...we have love. You are my daughter no matter what and I AM your father. I want to see you get into college, I want to help you buy your first car, see you get married one day..much later in life though, we don't have to rush that part...um, one day see you have a great career and purchase a house...so many more memories we are yet to share and I will never give all that up. I love you with all my heart, sweetheart, and nothing and no one can take that away from us. I will always be here for you through thick and thin as your father.
